Transit. Electronic fare payment pilot project launched by city

TESSA CLAYTON
calgary@metronews.ca

Soon it will be as easy as one, two, swipe.

Calgary Transit launched its pilot-project CONNECT electronic fare payment system Tuesday, hoping to iron out any kinks before launching the final system to the public sometime this summer.

CONNECT card holders will be able to use the reloadable cards on buses and the C-Train, all of which are now equipped with the smart-card technology.

The reloadable card can be loaded with time or trip amounts, as well as a cash value, and can be reloaded online, or through city hall cashiers and Transit Customer Service centres. Disposable cards will also be available.

"It will allow for more convenience and is another option for customers," said Ron Collins, of Calgary Transit.

University of Calgary student participant Natalie Chin said her first experiences with the system have been smooth.

"When I used public transit during high school, I had to buy a monthly pass every month, and it's a hassle just to go and buy it. But with these you can just load it up at home, so it's really quick."

Having a swipeable card eliminates the need for exact change when paying for transit, both Chin and Collins pointed out.

Pilot project

The pilot project runs until June 7, with 500 participants involved.

'Highway from Hell'

Crash victim's mom says Alberta road needs to be twinned

Brenda Holloway has always called Highway 63 the "Highway from Hell" but didn't realize just how deadly the Alberta road was until her son and only granddaughter were killed with five others on its blacktop.

Now she's pushing for the Alberta government to quickly finish twinning the highway to prevent more people from dying.

"It seems like these people in higher places just don't get it," Holloway said from her home in Niagara Falls, Ont. "I don't think it gets any worse than this collision."

Her son, Daniel Sennett, and his daughter, 11-year-old Faith, of Airdrie, were travelling to Fort McMurray last Friday to help his retiring father pack for a move back to Ontario.

Two die in separate crashes

One child is dead and another was flown by STARS air ambulance to a Calgary hospital, while two adults and another child were transported via ambulance to hospital after a crash near Chestermere Tuesday afternoon.

Another person also died after a crash on Highway 567, west of Symons Valley Road. A car veered into the path of an oncoming semi and burst into flames, police said.

The driver of the car is believed to be a Calgary man in his 50s.

Suspects sought in alleged attempted abduction

Random abductions. Uncommon in Calgary, police say

calgary@metronews.ca

The parents of a three-year-old child, who was the alleged victim of an attempted abduction Monday, are still shaken over the ordeal.

The child was playing in the backyard of the Windsor Park home Monday evening when her mother heard her scream.

Nazia Mirza, mother of Naya, said she saw two individuals, a male and female, carrying her daughter away.

Mirza said she screamed at the two individuals and they dropped Naya and fled on foot.

"They just threw my baby down," said Mirza.

"She is still scared."

Mirza said she did not recognize the two suspects.

The incident occurred in the 500 block of 56 Avenue southwest around 6 p.m.

"We are taking it very seriously," said Duty Insp. Darren Cave with CPS.

"This could be an attempted abduction."

Cave added that there are a lot of unanswered questions in the case and detectives are hoping to speak to Naya and re-interview her mother.

Police are looking for two suspects. The first is described as a dark-skinned black male, between 30 to 40 years old, standing about six feet tall with a very skinny build.

They are also looking for a white woman, 30 to 40 years old and about five-foot six with a heavy build.

Anyone with information is asked to contact police or Crime Stoppers.

Safe neighbourhood

- The Mirza family have two children.
- The family still says it's a safe neighbourhood.

Fan package. UFC Calgary tickets to be auctioned off by Children's Wish UFC fans will have the chance to score VIP tickets to a Calgary event, all for a good cause.

The Children's Wish Foundation of Canada will be holding an online auction for the ultimate fan package for the July 21 event ahead of its Thursday fundraising gala.

The package includes two VIP tickets in UFC president Dana White's personal section — tickets that will not be open to the public.

Children's Wish Alberta spokesperson Chantal Macleod said White generously donated the tickets as well as a one-hour backstage tour, front-row seats to the official weigh-in, gloves signed by fighter George St-Pierre and an autographed card signed by White himself.

"He kind of blew our expectations out of the water," she said.

The reserve bid on the package is set at $2,500 but Macleod said they hope to raise at least $10,000, which will cover the cost of granting one wish.

"Promenade," the LED art installation in East Village, sits right next to the 5th Avenue flyover. TESSA CLAYTON/FOR METRO

LED structure not a sign; considered public art

Bright lights. Lines blurred over signs and public art

TESSA CLAYTON
calgary@metronews.ca

Calgarians' heads are being turned by a piece of downtown public art, but it has left some scratching their noggins over the possible distraction.

The four-sided LED tower, located in East Village, features moving people against a bright yellow background and falls under the public-art classification.

Due to its public-art tag, the structure doesn't have to comply with the city's strict regulations for LED signage.

Susan Veres, of the Calgary Municipal Land Corporation (CMLC), said the organization has complied with city regulations regarding art installations.

"It isn't a sign, it's a piece of art and therefore there's a different process that has to be followed and our team has followed that process," said Veres.

Veres said both the area redevelopment plan and master plan for East Village specifically referred to the flyover as a prime location for the installation's placement.

Since its unveiling in mid-April, Calgary's 311 line has received four distraction-related calls about the CMLC-comissioned structure.

When city officials were asked about the differing criteria for standard LED signs and similar public art, they were not able to provide further details by deadline.

Permanent installation

- Local business owners expressed their concern to Metro over a perceived double standard for LED advertising signs and the LED public-art structure.
- The LED structure is the first of two permanent installations planned for East Village.

Alley Oop. City officials hope to see more events held in Calgary's laneways

KATIE TURNER
katie.turner@metronews.ca

Out of the auditorium and into the alley, opera will be taking to the back streets of Calgary this week for a performance in an unusual space.

Mercury Opera, along with the Calgary Downtown Association, are presenting Alley Oop — an operatic performance in an alleyway behind Stephen Avenue on May 4.

"What we wanted to do was really take the opportunity to take back our alleys," said Maggie Schofield of the Calgary Downtown Association.

"If you're going to start looking at a different venue, like an alley versus a street festival, you want to start with something you think you could be successful with."

Schofield said there will be pop-up performances along the Stephen Avenue Walk beginning at 6 p.m., followed by the mini-opera performance in the alley at sundown.

Ald. Druh Farrell said this is the first of what she hopes will be many events in alleyways throughout the city.

"What we want to do is allow temporary celebrations in laneways so that people can discover these spaces in a different way, and then hopefully move into something that's a little more permanent," she said.

"We're hearing a lot of interest, so it's really an attitude shift."

Tickets for the Alley Oop event can be purchased at alleyoop.eventbrite.com.

Provincial opposition

Wildrose announces shadow cabinet

Alberta is increasingly divided between urbanites and rural dwellers, says Opposition Leader Danielle Smith, who named herself cities critic Tuesday.

The Wildrose party leader's comments come only days after criticizing "urban elites" for their attitudes toward small-town voters and they follow suggestions by one of her newly minted members that rural voters have more common sense.

Bridge-building "needs to go both ways," Smith said after announcing her shadow cabinet Tuesday.

"There's a serious divide in this province, a lack of understanding about how much of our wealth is generated in our rural areas."

Smith's right-wing party was nearly shut out of the province's two largest cities, winning only two seats in Calgary and none in Edmonton.

Smith admitted she has work to do in the cities, where two-thirds of Alberta's population lives.

Smith said she has asked Calgary Mayor Naheed Nenshi if he might be able to broker a peace summit with Edmonton Mayor Stephen Mandel, who was critical of the Wildrose during the campaign.

Smith's shadow cabinet includes key posts for Rob Anderson and Heather Forsyth. Anderson was named Opposition house leader and finance critic. Forsyth was named to the health portfolio. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Children's Hospital research sheds light

Collaboration. International effort provides answers to mysterious genetic disease

TESSA CLAYTON
calgary@metronews.ca

Eight-year-old Hannah Richardson plays soccer, baseball and is bilingual. She was also diagnosed with Nager syndrome when she was five.

The rare genetic disorder causes deformations in the face and limbs, as well as deafness and speech impediments. Its cause was unknown — until now.

Researchers at the Alberta Children's Hospital have located the gene variant that causes Nager syndrome using next-generation gene sequencing, allowing them to test for the disorder, among other things.

The breakthrough proves Nager syndrome is not necessarily hereditary, as the genetic variant may not be found in either parent, and that the disorder will not progress in the future.

Hannah's parents, Ronalynn and Kevin, said the discovery provides peace of mind.

"With other families, it will help them a lot to know the percentages of them having other children with Nager syndrome or not," said Kevin.

Permits. City institutes rule requiring safety plans for construction sites

Construction debris falling from downtown Calgary buildings has been a problem during windstorms. METRO FILE

Builders will have to meet another level of safety requirements before being issued a permit, according the City of Calgary.

The city now requires public-protection site-safety plans to be submitted as part of the building-permit process for projects that are five storeys or greater, or are designated as a high building under the Alberta Building Code.

"These plans are intended to ensure the public are protected around construction sites at all times," said Kevin Griffiths, manager of building regulations, in a release. "We have worked closely with the construction industry in Calgary to determine plan requirements and to develop a review process."

Dave Smith, president of the Calgary Construction Association, said it's a positive step.

"It definitely will help enhance safety for the citizens of Calgary, along with the workforce."

The safety plans will not be reviewed when developers initially apply for a permit, but they will have to be reviewed before the building permit is released.

According to a city release, the need for increased safety was identified in 2009 when three-year-old Michelle Krsek was killed by falling construction material.

Key legal victory for veterans: Lawyers

Veteran John Labelle goes through security screening at Federal Court in Halifax in November. A Federal Court ruling that Ottawa should stop clawing back disability benefits from former Canadian Forces members is a key legal victory for some of the country's most-injured veterans, their lawyers say. The veterans, who launched a class-action lawsuit against the federal government, argued last November that the benefits were being unjustly clawed back because the payments were unfairly deemed as income. In a decision released Tuesday, Judge Robert Barnes agreed that the monthly Veterans Affairs pensions aren't "income benefits."

Feds grant permit for temporary residence to disgraced media mogul, saying he's no threat to public

Conrad Black, who renounced his Canadian citizenship, will be allowed to return here on a special permit. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Former media tycoon Conrad Black has been granted permission to live in Canada when he is released from a Florida prison Friday after serving time for obstruction of justice and fraud.

The Department of Citizenship and Immigration has authorized a one-year temporary-resident permit for Black that starts in early May, a source confirmed.

The permit was granted on the grounds that he poses no threat to the Canadian public, said a source familiar with the matter.

The 67-year-old Montreal native renounced his Canadian citizenship in 2001 after being offered a peerage in Britain's House of Lords.

Black's two convictions make him criminally inadmissible for residency in Canada. But his temporary-resident permit circumvents this.

End of an era? Cuba mulls ending travel restrictions

After controlling the comings and goings of its people for five decades, communist Cuba appears on the verge of a momentous decision to lift many travel restrictions. One senior official says a "radical and profound" change is weeks away.

The comment by Parliament Chief Ricardo Alarcon has residents, exiles and policy makers abuzz with speculation that the much-hated exit visa could be a thing of the past, even if Raul Castro's government continues to limit the travel of doctors, scientists, military personnel and others in sensitive roles to prevent a brain drain.

In the past 18 months, Castro has removed prohibitions on some private enterprises, legalized real estate and car sales, and allowed compatriots to hire employees.

Exit visa

- Open doors. The move would open the door to increased emigration and make it easier for Cubans overseas to avoid forfeiting their residency rights, a fate that has befallen waves of exiles since the 1959 revolution.
- Travel abroad. It could also bolster the number of Cubans who travel abroad for work, increasing earnings sent home in the short term and, ultimately, investment by a new moneyed class.

Netherlands

Weed-sale ban partially in effect

A policy barring foreign tourists from buying marijuana in the Netherlands went into effect in parts of the country Tuesday, with attention focused on the southern city of Maastricht.

Weed is technically illegal in the Netherlands, but it has been sold openly for decades in small amounts in designated cafés. Under a government policy change, as of May 1, only holders of a "weed pass" are supposed to be allowed to purchase the drug in three southern provinces.

Questions still remain over who facilitated bin Laden's stay in Pakistan

Security forces. No answers from Pakistan one year after the U.S. raid that killed world's most wanted terrorist

A Pakistani shepherd looks on while leading his livestock along a road in Abbottabad, Pakistan, where U.S. commandos killed Osama bin Laden one year ago. MUHAMMED MUHEISEN/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

One year since U.S. commandos flew into this Pakistani army town and killed Osama bin Laden, Islamabad has failed to answer tough questions over whether its security forces were protecting the world's most wanted terrorist.

Partly as a result, fallout from the raid still poisons relations between Washington and Pakistan, where anti-American sentiment, support for Islamist extremism and anger at the violation of sovereignty in the operation can be summed up by a Twitter hashtag doing the rounds: #02MayBlackDay.

The Pakistani government initially welcomed the raid that killed bin Laden in his three-storey compound, but within hours the mood changed as it became clear that Pakistan's army was cut out of the operation. Any discussions over how bin Laden managed to stay undetected in Pakistan were drowned out in anger at what the army portrayed as a treacherous act by a supposed ally.

U.S. feds nab five allegedly plotting to blow up bridge

Turning to violence. Accused plotters talked about making a statement against corporate America

Five men described by federal authorities as anarchists angry with corporate America and the government were charged Tuesday with plotting to bomb a bridge linking two wealthy Cleveland suburbs.

The men were arrested Monday night after unknowingly working with an FBI informant for months. They were charged with conspiracy and trying to bomb property used in interstate commerce.

"They talked about making a statement against corporate America and the government as some of the motivations for their actions," said U.S. Attorney Steven Dettelbach in announcing the arrests.

The alleged plotters researched explosives and obtained what they thought was C-4 explosives. The items, in fact, were harmless and the public was never at risk, because the men got the material from the informant, officials said.

All five had initial appearances Tuesday in U.S. District Court, where Magistrate Judge Greg White ordered them jailed without bond pending a hearing Monday. The charges carry possible penalties of more than 20 years in prison.

"Love you, Connor," shouted James Stevens to his son, Connor Stevens, 20, of suburban Berea, at the end of the hearing.

The other suspects were identified as Joshua S. Stafford, 23, and Anthony Hayne, 35, both of Cleveland, Brandon L. Baxter, 20, of nearby Lakewood, and Douglas L. Wright, 26, of Indianapolis.

The target of the plot was a bridge that carries a state highway over part of the Cuyahoga Valley National Park and a picturesque scenic rail line and canal towpath in the Brecksville area, about 24 kilometres south of downtown Cleveland.

The affidavit filed in court indicated that federal authorities got help from a paid confidential source who had previous robbery and other convictions and was on probation for passing bad checks. It said the informant began making contact with the suspects in October and had recorded conversations with them over the past three months.

The men also discussed other potential targets, including a law enforcement centre, oil wells or a cargo ship, according to the affidavit.

Smuggling. U.K. police arrest seven on suspicion of funding terrorism

Seven people have been arrested in Britain on suspicion of financing terrorism in Somalia by smuggling a leaf that can produce a mild high into the U.S., officials said Tuesday.

Scotland Yard said the group was arrested as part of an operation that involved Homeland Security Investigations, the investigative branch of U.S. Immigrations and Customs Enforcement.

The operation was investigating a network suspected of illegally exporting a leaf known as khat from the U.K., where it is legal, to the U.S. and Canada, where it is a controlled substance, Scotland Yard said.

"The proceeds generated by this illegal activity (were) then transferred back to Somalia," said Ross Feinstein, a spokesman for U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement.

- It has been illegal in the U.S. since 1993, but is still legal in many countries worldwide.

Man convicted of plotting New York subway attack

A man was convicted Tuesday of plotting an aborted suicide mission against New York City subways in 2009 — a case that featured the first-time testimony from admitted homegrown terrorists about al-Qaida's fixation with pulling off another attack on America soil.

A jury found Adis Medunjanin guilty of all counts for his role in a terror plot that federal authorities say was one of the closest calls since Sept. 11, 2001.

Court defends accommodations for Hudson at murder trial

Chicago. Actress is expected to attend each day of testimony

Jennifer Hudson arrives each day at the trial of the man accused of killing three of her close family members with her personal bodyguards in tow. She uses a secret entrance to elude photographers, eats in private and waits for proceedings to start in normally off-limits judge's chambers.

The Oscar winner, recently named one of the world's most beautiful women by People magazine, slips from the courtroom during particularly gory testimony.

Do the accommodations for the actress and singer add up to special star treatment?

"Absolutely not," said Irv Miller, a judge's liaison at the trial, which is into its second full week.

Most accommodations, he insisted, are courtesies routinely extended to victims enduring the grim ordeal of sitting through a murder trial. Others, he conceded, are necessary because Hudson — a 2004 American Idol finalist and 2007 Oscar winner for her role in Dreamgirls — is a celebrity.

"Star status means things have to be a little different," he said. "You just can't have a celebrity walking about, going to the cafeteria — people running up to ask for autographs."

Others, however, say the courthouse has gone too far.

"It's outrageous," said Manny Medrano, a Los Angeles-based defence attorney. "It sends the wrong signal to the world — that if you are a celebrity, you won't be treated like everyone."

Her treatment may be a result of Chicago's relative lack of experience with celebrity cases. In Southern California, said Medrano, people expect celebrities to be treated at court like everyone else.

Abdul Mazid, 42, centre, whose sister is missing, anxiously watches rescuers pull out the wreckage of a ferry that capsized in the Brahmaputra River at Buraburi village in India. ANUPAM NATH/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Death toll rises following India ferry disaster

Capsized. About 100 people were still missing as of Tuesday evening

Rescuers on Tuesday had recovered 103 bodies from a turbulent river in northeast India after a heavily packed ferry capsized, saying they feared that dozens of others had been swept by the current to neighbouring Bangladesh.

The overloaded ferry overturned and broke into two pieces in stormy weather late Monday.

Abdul Mazid, a local villager, was among grieving relatives and survivors gathered on the banks of the Brahmaputra River in Assam state.

He had rushed there soon after the boat ferrying about 350 people — including his sister — capsized. Some passengers swam to safety or were rescued by villagers, but Mazid was still waiting in silence on the crowded river bank for news of his sister 24 hours later.

Rescuers said they feared that the swift-moving currents had carried dozens of bodies downstream into neighbouring Bangladesh.

The ferry was a daily service that connected several small riverside villages and islands to the main district town.

Survivors told television channels how the ferry had been packed tight with passengers and cargo, with about 150 people riding on the ferry's roof.

Hasnat Ali said that he had been on the roof as the vessel headed to shore to dock when a storm hit. The ferry was tossed about and many of those sitting with him were thrown off. Some managed to swim to shore before the ferry was dashed to pieces, he said.

Ali managed to cling to a log and was later rescued by local villagers, he said.

The accident occurred about 350 kilometres west of the state capital, Gauhati. The area is dotted with riverside settlements and islands, and boats are the most common mode of transport. Most ferries are poorly built and often overcrowded, with little regard for safety regulations. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Ceasefire violations reported in Syria

The UN peacekeeping chief said Tuesday that UN military observers in Syria are reporting ceasefire violations from the government and opposition and he demanded an immediate halt to all violence. Herve Ladsous refused to say which side was responsible for the most violations. But he said the unarmed observers have documented a number of Syrian heavy weapons deployed in populated areas. Syrian forces fired mortar shells into a farming village near the Turkish border Tuesday, killing 10 people, among them two young children. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Tribunal. Libya challenges ICC's right to try Gadhafi son

The Libyan government on Tuesday formally challenged the International Criminal Court's (ICC) right to try Moammar Gadhafi's son for war crimes, arguing that he should face justice on Libyan soil despite concerns he may not receive a fair trial there.

It also asked The Hague, Netherlands-based court to drop its demands to hand over Seif al-Islam Gadhafi while it considers the challenge.

The ICC is authorized by the UN to try war crimes committed last year as rebels fought the Gadhafi regime. It has issued an arrest warrant for the late dictator's son for allegedly killing and persecuting civilians during the uprising.

RIM reveals new operating system

BlackBerry. 'We're taking our time to ... get this right,' says CEO about improved BlackBerry 10 OS

RIM CEO Thorsten Heins shows off a BlackBerry with the new operating system, which is still being tested. REINHOLD MATAY/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The chief executive of Research In Motion, Thorsten Heins, stood before the developers who could play a crucial role in the company's future and gave them a first look Tuesday at the new BlackBerry 10 operating system.

The widely anticipated unveiling at its annual BlackBerry World conference centered on some awe-inspiring technological developments sandwiched between pounding club music and a heavy dose of flashing spotlights that could send any raver into a tizzy.

The three-day showcase is intended to get fickle programmers excited about the future of RIM (TSX:RIM) and developing applications for the BlackBerry 10. The Waterloo, Ont., company is struggling to recover from numerous blunders over the past year, including flagging sales, a woefully underdeveloped apps store and criticism that it hasn't released a new smartphone in ages.

"We're taking our time to make sure we get this right," Heins told developers shortly before revealing the prototype at the keynote address.

"I know how much hard work went into this," he added.

Heins, who marked his 100th day atop the smartphone maker on Tuesday, then pulled a touchscreen device from his pocket running the BlackBerry 10 OS in its beta version. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Australia

RIM takes blame for flashmob

BlackBerry-maker Research In Motion has admitted its role in organizing an anti-Apple flashmob outside a Sydney, Australia, Apple Store last week.

The stunt, which saw dozens of black-clothed people arrive outside the Sydney store in a coach bus and wave "Wake up" signs at Apple customers inside the shop, drew criticism in the blogosphere as an "embarrassing" marketing attempt.

A number of tech-focused websites first pointed the finger at Samsung, the smartphone company known for its Apple-targeted campaigns. But Samsung denied its role in the guerrilla marketing campaign.

MacWorld Australia revealed on April 29 that they found a Double Click URL on a "Wake Up" webpage that had ties to RIM Australia.

The campaign is said to be part of RIM's promotion for the BlackBerry OS 10. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

THERE ARE NO WINNERS IN THE LINGERIE FOOTBALL LEAGUE

JUST SAYIN'
Paul Sullivan
metronews.ca/justsaying

It wasn't easy, but I'm pretty sure I've discovered the worst idea ever spawned.

If you were going to start a Museum for Morons, this would be the cornerstone: the Lingerie Football League.

Here's the "concept": Teams of scantily clad women play tackle football. There are seven players to a side, and in addition to shoulder pads and helmets their uniforms include garters, bras and panties.

As far as I can tell, there are no male cheerleader squads in their tighty-whities, cheering on local favourites such as the Los Angeles Temptations, Lingerie Bowl champs for three years in row, or the Philadelphia Passion, last year's losers.

Here's the thing: The LFL is too stupid to live, at least in the U.S. The league recently announced it has shut down U.S. operations to concentrate on re-opening in April 2013 (remind you of the restaurant that's shut down for "renovations?") In the meantime, the only teams on the field in 2012 will be in — wait for it — Canada.

No league of their own

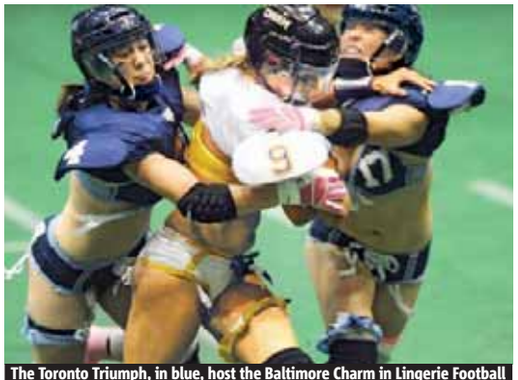
The sad thing is that, despite the automatic, gratuitous titillation that comes with this farce, some of the young women who play the game can actually play, and, when asked, say they would rather play in a serious league that requires clothes. But LFL is the only game in town.

Apparently, there are enough hosers left in the Great White North to watch women humiliate themselves for nothing. The league stopped paying players at the beginning of the 2011 season. If they get hurt in those ridiculous get-ups, tough. They pay their own health insurance, except in Canada where you and I pay for their health care.

There are four teams set to begin the season: the BC Angels, the Toronto Triumph and, to the eternal shame of Saskatchewan, the Regina Rage and the Saskatoon Sirens. The teams will play eight games, culminating in the Canadian Lingerie Bowl the day before the Grey Cup. The CFL should sue for unwanted proximity.

The sad thing — but not the only sad thing! There's a plethora of sad things! — is that, despite the automatic, gratuitous titillation that comes with this farce, some of the young women who play the game can actually play, and, when asked, say they would rather play in a serious league that requires clothes. But LFL is the only game in town. Actually four towns. In Canada.

It will be interesting to see if any of these games are actually played. And, if they are, if anyone shows up to watch. Even the most dedicated fans of the Rage or the Angels will be hard-pressed to explain where they're going instead of mowing the lawn or power-washing the deck: "Oh, just to watch a football game played by women in their sexy lingerie. Some of the girls can, um, play."



The Toronto Triumph, in blue, host the Baltimore Charm in Lingerie Football League action at the Ricoh Coliseum in Toronto.

Genie's and Gemini's become one show

Canada's top film and television awards bashes are being combined into a single televised ceremony. The Academy of Canadian Cinema & Television says it is merging annual broadcasts of the Genie Awards, which salute the best in film, and the Gemini Awards, which celebrate homegrown television. Academy chair Martin Katz says the move follows "extensive industry consultation and outreach." The next gala will be a two-hour event on March 3, 2013 airing on CBC-TV. The annual Gemeaux Awards will celebrate French-language television and digital media on Radio-Canada on Sept. 16, as previously announced. Shows currently eligible for the 2012 Gemini Awards will be part of the academy's new awards show in March 2013.

Fall in love with a villain

New Bond film. Javier Bardem wants you to sympathize with his character as he tries to kill James Bond

KIERON MONKS
Metro World News

It's a dirty job trying to kill James Bond, but Javier Bardem does not believe he is the bad guy.

"Actors are the lawyers of our characters and we defend them no matter what," he smiles.

Penelope Cruz's husband is serious when he describes super-villain Raoul Silva as a "very complex character."

His attempt to win sympathy for the devil was inspired by Bruno Ganz's performance as Adolf Hitler in The Downfall.

Bardem already looks bulletproof. In 2007, the 53 year-old became the first Spaniard ever to win an Oscar, for playing psychopathic killer in No Country For Old Men, and his casting opposite 007 confirms his rise to Hollywood royalty status.

"This is only my second commercial movie, the territory is still new to me," says Bardem, who spent most of his career in low-budget, experimental cinema. "But, for me, it's the same. The set is bigger, the money is bigger, but the commitment is the same."

He has enjoyed his duel with "impressive" Daniel Craig, although Bardem did not share his rival's love of the gym, and kept in shape by eating only fish and vegetables. Although happy to play the villain, life-long Bond fan Bardem would not rule out a job swap to wear the tuxedo in future.

"I'm open, but Daniel is doing a great job."

Spoiler alert

Prediction time: Look out for these...

- M dies. A shock as the MI6 chief has been with the series since the beginning. Judi Dench has played M for seven films but rumours persist this will be the last.
- Spy feelings. Daniel Craig is credited with bringing more humanity to 007, and he says we "get to know him better" in Skyfall. Part of this involves seeing his home for the first time, and possibly discovering that he leaves all his washing up in the sink.
- The best of both worlds. Key scenes will take place in Asia. Bond will confront villain Silva on the Japanese Island of Hashima, and test his luck in a gorgeously designed Macau casino. But expect plenty of action in London, including an epic chase.

CFL wide receiver. Brad Smith to seek soulmate as star of Bachelor Canada

Canadian Football League wide receiver Brad Smith will seek his soulmate as the star of The Bachelor Canada when it premieres in the fall.

The program will be modelled after the popular U.S reality show The Bachelor.

A statement from Rogers Media describes Smith as "driven, confident, candid and comfortable in his own skin."

It goes on to say he is attracted to women "who are independent, intelligent, and just as confident in a ponytail, sweatpants and sweatshirt as they are all dressed up for a night out on the town."

The 28-year-old athlete says he's "extremely honoured" to be chosen, adding that he takes the experience very seriously and believes in the process. Additional details, including the identity of the host and the 25 bachelorettes, are still to be revealed.

Meet (and re-meet) the Avengers

Star-studded film. Here are a few of the movies that helped shape this group of actors into stars

IN FOCUS
Richard Crouse
scene@metronews.ca

The Avengers stars a group of actors who were well known before they donned the capes and mechanical suits of Iron Man, Captain America, Thor and The Hulk.

Of them, Robert Downey Jr. was the best known, while the Chrises, Evans and Hemsworth were talented up-and-comers and Mark Ruffalo was the Oscar-nominated indie king.

With the film breaking box office records in its worldwide release, it's fair to say each of these actors will now go from superheroes to superstars.

But what about before they could leap tall buildings in a single bound? (I know that was Superman, but you get my point!) Here are some movies that helped shape this quartet of actors into stars.

Robert Downey Jr., Chris Evans, Chris Hemsworth and Mark Ruffalo star in The Avengers. HANDOUT

Robert Downey Jr.

Despite saying, "I know very little about acting. I'm just an incredibly gifted faker," Downey has developed into what Esquire called "the second best actor in the world."

Ten years ago, however, Downey was better known for his extracurricular activities than his films. His committed, loopy performances made him a star at a young age and netted him an Oscar nomination for playing Charlie Chaplin, but drugs and alcohol sidelined him until 2001 when, clean and sober, he rebuilt his career.

MUST SEES: Less Than Zero, Natural Born Killers, Chaplin, Good Night & Good Luck, Richard III.

Chris Evans

Evans played a superhero in Fantastic Four and its sequel, but it took Captain America to make him an A-list star.

He's flip-flopped between mainstream fare like Not Another Teen Movie and edgier films like The Loss of a Teardrop Diamond, to "show some layers. I'm not just a superhero-action guy."

MUST SEES: Scott Pilgrim vs. the World, Puncture, Fierce People.

Chris Hemsworth

Hemsworth made his American debut as George Kirk, father to the icon character James T. in the reboot of Star Trek.

Already a soap (Home and Away) and reality show (Dancing with the Stars) star in Australia, the muscle bound performer beat out dozens of actors to win the role of Thor, including his own brother Liam Hemsworth.

MUST SEES: Cabin in the Woods, A Perfect Getaway.

Mark Ruffalo

Early comparisons to Marlon Brando earned Ruffalo roles in an interesting array of films. Playing Laura Linney's slacker brother in You Can Count on Me made him a star and indie film darling.

MUST SEES: My Life Without Me, Eternal Sunshine of the Spotless Mind, Shutter Island, The Kids Are All Right.

Singing to let it sink in: Mayer's new song about getting over Aniston

John Mayer is reportedly using Shadow Days, a song off his new album, to finally process the end of his relationship with Jennifer Aniston, according to Us Weekly.

"It really took him a long time to get over her. He really loved her a lot," a source says. "He wrote the song as a farewell letter knowing (Jen) would hear it. Ultimately he's done a lot of self-reflection though, and he realizes they weren't right for each other."

In the video for the song, Mayer drives along a lonely desert road, singing, "I finally learned to let it go."

Jessica finally has that baby

THE WORD
Dorothy Robinson
scene@metronews.ca

Although Jessica Simpson didn't have the longest pregnancy in the world, it certainly felt like she did.

Well, the eternal wait ended yesterday with Simpson and her fiancé Eric Johnson announcing the birth (finally!) of daughter Maxwell Drew Johnson on Simpson's website.

The baby was certainly well-marinated, weighing in at 9 lbs, 13 oz. But lest Maxwell Drew get all the attention, let's look at which other celebrities popped out a baby while we were all fixated on Simpson's ever-expanding waistline.

• Katherine Heigl and husband Josh Kelley expanded their family and adopted another daughter, according to People magazine. The baby's name and other details are not yet available.

• It was announced in March that Charlize Theron adopted a baby. "She is the proud mom of a healthy baby boy named Jackson," her rep told People magazine.

• Simpson's ex, Dallas Cowboys quarterback Tony Romo and his wife Candice Crawford welcomed their first child on April 9, his NFL teammates announced on Twitter.

The only birth to overshadow Simpson's? Beyoncé and Jay-Z welcoming daughter Blue Ivy Carter in January. Of course, they are our version of royalty, whereas Jessica Simpson is a reality TV star who hasn't had a hit song in at least a decade.

Maggie Gyllenhaal

Gyllenhaal welcomes baby girl after keeping mum on pregnancy

Maggie Gyllenhaal and Peter Sarsgaard welcomed their second daughter, Gloria Ray, last week, their rep confirms to People magazine. The pair, who married in 2009, also have a 5-year-old daughter, Ramona.

Gloria Ray was born April 19 in New York. Gyllenhaal kept mum on her pregnancy this time around as long as she could — which wasn't easy.

"I find it difficult to pretend you're not pregnant, which I had to do," she told USA Today in March. "I didn't let anyone know until three-and-a-half months this time. I went to film festivals. I'm throwing up in the bathroom and having to keep pretzels in my purse, and having to fit into dresses."

4 Berlin Surprises

Think Berlin is simply a city of bad graffiti and raves? Au contraire! We found some chilled out lounges and delicious food.

METRO WORLD NEWS

1 Unexpectedly good aesthetic

Despite what you see in the movies, it's not all Soviet concrete (though there's a fair share) — Berlin is an interesting mix of Paris meets the Ukraine. The result is surprisingly pretty, and the city's Bauhaus School sensibility stamps industrial design and architecture. Be sure to visit the Bauhus Archiv, and then spot influences throughout the city.

2 There's chilled-out local bars

When you're ready to recover from the raves, take a break at this sophisticated but relaxed bar. Scotch and Sofa boasts a décor that screams junk sale-meets-Mad Men.

3 Unexpected market shopping

The Mauerpark Flohmarkt —"Mauerpark" means "wallpark" and used to be an area enclosed by the Berlin Wall —sells antiques, records, homemade jewelry and more. Top it off with a nod to the city's Turkish population at the massive lunch counter serving eastern delicacies.

Walk to the market by starting at the corner of Bernauer Strasse and Gartenstrasse, and see sections of the wall and the memorial on the way.

Last minute booking? There's an app for that

For those times when you suddenly need a hotel room but have no idea where to book, a new mobile app that launched in Canada last Thursday promises to find the best deal for a last-minute stay. According to Sam Shank, there's a multi-billion-dollar business opportunity in offering cut-rate hotel rooms with mere hours to spare. The CEO of the mobile app HotelTonight, now available in Toronto and Vancouver, says there's big money in helping hotels clear out their inventory at the last minute. Starting at noon local time each day, users loading up HotelTonight's Apple or Android app can search for offers available that night, with the option of extending the reservation by an additional four nights.

A wild time awaits in South Africa

Touring. The Travellin' Canadian mixes wine, cheetahs and an ostrich ride on this 12-day adventure

THE TRAVELLIN' CANADIAN
Darren Parkman
travel@metronews.ca

The wilds of South Africa may not be as far off and inaccessible as you think, especially if you're willing to get down and dirty and rough it just a tad.

I admit, I'm no stranger to luxury hotels with mints on the pillow, but perhaps it was time to trade room service and pay per view movies for a tent in the middle of the plains.

And I'm all the better for it.

The aptly named "On the Go" tour company offers one adventurous, action-packed 12-day tour, that takes you out in the wild, and away from the comforts of all those boring five star hotels.

It may not be for the faint hearted, but for the more adventurous it's an unforgettable tour by tent.

I learned a lot from this experience ... for instance, who knew that wine went so well with cheetahs?

Not far from Capetown lies one of South Africa's oldest towns, Stellenbosch, a gorgeous growing region, rich with vineyards and award-winning vino.

Even cooler is the fact that nestled among this picturesque wine country is a sanctuary for one of Africa's deadliest predators, the cheetah.

Luckily these aren't the lightening fast zebra killing kind of cheetahs, but instead the friendly, almost lazy kind.

For a small price you can even pet these lounging cats.

They were so friendly it almost seemed like they'd been sampling the wine in the area.

Another highlight of this tour lies in another town with an impressive reputation.

Oudtshoorn has the distinction of being the ostrich capital of the world. Need I say more.

Here, you can actually pet, race and yes, even ride ... you guessed it, big ostriches!

Sadly, you must be under 140 pounds to mount these mammoth birds, so I had to be content to watch others enjoy the ride.

Luckily, none of the birds stuck their heads in the sand during the run.

Now that could have been painful.

Other highlights on this Garden Route tour include an option to dive with great white sharks, and a visit to Addo Elephant National Park.

With a base price under $900 for the 12-day tour, it's a good adventure for the money!

These cheetahs like lounging more than hunting. PHOTOS: DARREN PARKMAN

Other cool things to do...

- Check out Capetown. Kristenbosch Botanical Gardens, the famous Table Mountain and an impressive outdoor market are just a few of the must sees in this great city.

Celebrate fresh & light flavours of spring with delicious roasted fare

Look for local lamb at the market or in stores now as spring is always a favourite time of year to cook it up. This recipe is perfect for a Sunday dinner to share with family and friends.

1. In a small bowl, stir together Dijon, rosemary, garlic and olive oil.

2. Place lamb in a roasting pan and rub marinade over entire surface of the lamb. Roast lamb in the centre of a 190 C (375 F) oven for 60 to 90 minutes or until internal temperature reaches 52 C (125 F) at the thickest point for medium rare. Roast longer for desired doneness. Let lamb rest for 30 minutes before slicing.

3. Walnut Salsa: Meanwhile, in a bowl, stir together chopped walnuts, parsley, mint, anchovies, capers, peppercorns, oil, lemon rind and juice until combined. Spoon over sliced lamb to serve.

Roasted tomatoes employ just the right amount of nuts

This recipe serves four. MATTHEW MEAD/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Nuts often get a bad rap because of their high fat content. But the fat in most nuts is the healthy unsaturated variety.

The trick is moderation. And because nuts are so rich, moderation can be easy. All that rich flavour means it doesn't take much to feel satisfied. Whether you prefer to incorporate them in a dish, sprinkle them on a salad, or snack them by the handful, they are a great choice for healthy eating.

Nuts generally have a deeper flavour when toasted. To toast raw nuts, place them on a dry baking sheet and roast for 10 to 12 minutes at 350 F. Keep a close eye on them because they go from toasted to burnt very quickly.

The freezer is the best place to store nuts. All their healthy oils put them at risk for going rancid. Place them in a zip-close plastic bag and squeeze out the air before freezing.

This recipe showcases walnuts in a composed salad of roasted tomatoes and creamy, herbed ricotta cheese. For a great dinner, serve this alongside a piece of crusty multi-grain bread with some greens and a grilled chicken breast.

1. Heat the oven to 325 F. Place a wire rack over a rimmed baking sheet. Spray the rack with cooking spray.

2. Arrange the tomatoes on the rack, cut sides up. Sprinkle the tomatoes with the salt, sugar and white pepper. Roast for 1 hour. Flip the tomatoes over and roast for another hour, or until the tomatoes are soft, wrinkly and have shrunken considerably in size.

3. While the tomatoes are roasting, in a medium bowl stir together the ricotta, basil, thyme and oregano. Set aside to allow the flavours to meld.

4. Serve the herbed ricotta alongside the roasted tomato halves. Sprinkle with toasted walnuts and drizzle lightly with balsamic vinegar, if using.

The skill switchover

You've got a lot to offer. How to sell your transferable part-time job skills for full-time employment

SASHA RANA
TalentEgg.ca

I've gone through the interview process countless times and I think the most important piece of advice I can offer is: sell your transferable skills.

After graduating from university or college, many of us do not have the experience we need to land our dream jobs. What we do have, however, is a slate full of entry-level positions which may include server, retail sales associate, fast-food worker, and many other so called "useless jobs."

However, one thing that many of us fail to recognize is that the skills you acquire in all of these jobs will help you become successful in your future career.

Your hospitality experience can 'serve' you well in the application process. ISTOCK

Imagine this scenario

Your interviewer on one side of the desk flipping through your resumé, saying, "So let's go through your past experiences and what you can bring to the table in this position…" Meanwhile you're on the other side fretting, thinking to yourself, "How am I supposed to highlight my qualifications when I don't have any?" But you do!

Here are a few common jobs students hold, and how to identify transferable skills you can sell to any position:

Server

You're on your feet all day, remembering orders, juggling various tables. This translates to hard working and dedicated, quick learning and an ability to handle various tasks at once. Also constantly dealing with customers of all levels of difficulty builds character and resilience.

Retail sales associate

You deal with many aspects of daily sales operations from point of sale purchases and returns, to organizing merchandise, to assisting customers in finding suitable products. This translates to the ability to multi-task, you have organizational skills, not to mention always maintaining a positive attitude while helping customers choose that perfect item.

Fast-food worker

You work in a small area with a million operations going on at once. You have to ensure customer satisfaction, while working with a number of people in providing tasty food and drinks quickly. This translates to the ability to work in a fast-paced environment while accomplishing several tasks at once. This position also screams team work!

Turn one job into one million opportunities

Sally Gao
Graduate, Journalism
Ryerson University
TalentEgg.ca

I graduated from Ryerson University with a Bachelor of Journalism degree in spring 2010 with the hopes of finding a job in the media industry. I started looking for positions in my professional field in May and went through some interviews that didn't lead to anything.

I realized that the biggest obstacle hindering my prospects of finding a job was my experience. Even though I volunteered to write for my school outlets, such as The Eyeopener and McClung's Magazine, I didn't get enough training and exposure to the real world work environment.

Without wasting my time, I researched many companies online using Twitter, Facebook and even YouTube to gather insights on which industry I should tap into. I considered getting an education in public relations and communications but felt I needed some work experience before I decided if that's something I really wanted to get into.

Nonetheless, I finally got my first job at the end of 2010, where I was a Content Writer for a small online company. This job gave me the platform to try and learn new things, including SEO marketing, social media networking and branding. It opened my eyes to different career paths I could take and I became more confident in my job prospects as a growing journalist.

Where I am now

I recently went back to school to pursue a graduate certificate in Human Resources Management but dropped out of the program because I didn't feel I was ready to change careers just yet. I volunteered for different online magazines and networked with people in the writing and editing industry.

My recommendations for employers, schools and career centres

One thing I highly recommend for employers is to look beyond the education and look for any transferable skills a potential candidate may have. Many people who worked at different jobs have acquired multiple skill sets that can be used for another job they apply for. Just because they may not have the degree, training or education doesn't mean their experience doesn't allow them to learn those aspects. What matters is what results they can bring to the company and what value they have as an employee. It's important that prospective workers can apply their knowledge into the work they do, as well as have a solid academic foundation to back it up.

My recommendations for students

My advice for fellow students and recent grads is to keep trying and don't let the fear of getting rejected bring you down. If there's anything I've learned through my whole job hunting experience, it is to open your mind to different possibilities and never be afraid to think outside the box. You never know what you're capable of unless you try. And if you're not doing something you love right now, chances are the experience you've gained from it will go a long way when it comes to making connections and getting better opportunities down the road.

Don't get trapped in one industry. Dig around outside of your degree type

Are you coming out of school with a degree and not sure where to go next to pursue a career?

A degree in accounting doesn't mean you need to join an accounting firm. A degree in computer science doesn't mean you need to work for a technology company.

Students are too often limiting themselves to a specific industry and not looking out for the multitude of opportunities available in other industries that are still suited to their training. Think outside the industry box.

"(Students) have their minds set on one specific industry, which can really limit their job opportunities," says Debbie Bottineau, Regional Vice-President of OfficeTeam. There are so many opportunities across a variety of industries that are neglected because people think the jobs don't exist.

She also suggests not limiting yourself by solely focusing on full-time positions. "A lot of employers are looking for hands-on work experience, so don't just focus on full-time opportunities. Look at temporary and contract positions as well."

So now that you're ready to start searching and you've reached a career site (like TalentEgg), where do you begin?

"I would say as a starting point, look broad from an industry perspective," says Bottineau. "You want to identify your transferable skills and tackle position types versus one specific industry."

Tapping in to a female-in-tech shortage

Madame Macintosh.
A Canadian program is bringing women together to strengthen their technical skills

Will you be creating your own community of clickers? ISTOCK

Frustrated with a lack of female-targeted resources to help women learn high-tech skills for today's digital world, Heather Payne decided to act.

The 25-year-old's brainwave is Toronto-based non-profit Ladies Learning Code, a group that aims to "empower everyone to feel comfortable learning beginner-friendly technical skills in a social, collaborative way."

"We all see the issue of women (underrepresented) in technology and it hasn't gone away," says Payne, who launched the organization with its first seminar last July.

Where the girls at?

"We all see the issue of women (underrepresented) in technology and it hasn't gone away."

Heather Payne
Creator of Ladies Learning Code

She herself had a non-technical background when she got the idea, inspired by a workshop in the U.S. for women to learn the computer programming language Python.

Payne had started dabbling in web design and quickly got hooked but had trouble moving on to the next level.

"I had so much fun that I could spend like eight hours a day or more just working on my site and fixing things and tweaking the code — and so I got kind of addicted," she says.

"I wanted to keep learning more and I thought about the idea of learning a programming language so I could start to build some simple applications. That's when I kind of got frustrated, it was hard to know what exactly to learn, or what tutorials to try, and it was isolating because I didn't know anybody else who wanted to learn this as well."

When she first pitched the idea of Ladies Learning Code on her blog and Twitter, she was surprised by the enthusiastic response.

"The first workshop sold out in a day," she recalls.

In the early going, workshops — which usually cost about $45 — were held once a month. This year, the schedule was boosted to an average of two or more workshops a month.

Less than a year after its launch, Ladies Learning Code will welcome its 1,000th user at its next event this week, about Python.

Most of the participants have been in their 20s, Payne says, turning out for all-day workshops on subjects such as Javascript, HTML and CSS, Ruby, WordPress, designing mobile websites and Photoshop.

Payne has heard from women around Canada who'd love to take part in her seminars but so far, there are no expansion plans. "The idea of managing events in multiple cities is pretty intimidating," Payne says.

"There's certainly been interest so we'd love to find a way to make it work.... We see how Ladies Learning Code has caught on, it's been way more than any of us could have ever expected. I didn't think there were this many people in Toronto who would be interested in something like this."

Workplace Law

Confusion around crossing the line

WORKPLACE LAW
Daniel Lublin
dan@canadaemploymentlawyer.com
Twitter: @danlublin

In Canadian workplaces today, sexual harassment is defined by a thin yellow line. Sexual innuendo that can easily be seen as harmless flirting to one employee, can just as easily be seen as an invitation for a lawsuit, to another.

As sexual harassment is often in the eyes of the beholder, when will an employee's inappropriate comments cost him his job?

Robert Gillam held an important job as a supervisor working on pipeline projects in Western Canada, for Waschuk Pipe Line Construction, a mainly male dominated workplace. Three females worked at the job site, and one of them just happened to be the daughter of the company's owner.

Gillam felt that the three female employees spent too much time socializing with the male employees and that they were responsible for work not getting done. As a result, in conversations with other employees, he consistently referred to them in very derogatory terms, blaming them for a number of his problems.

When the women complained that the name calling amounted to harassment, Gillam was warned that his job was on the line.

Although the issue improved for some time, it did not disappear entirely.

When the company's owner later learned that one of the female employees was considering suing the company, he decided that Gillam had to be fired without severance. Gillam sued arguing that his conduct was not serious enough to justify his dismissal.

At a recent trial, Gillam's case was dismissed. According to the judge, it did not matter that Gillam did not make the derogatory statements directly to the female employees. Since they learned about his statements through others, it poisoned the workplace and qualified as sexual harassment nonetheless. In the quest to define when an employee's inappropriate comments will amount to sexual harassment, there are some recurring themes:

* Whether there is a workplace harassment policy and whether its terms have been followed.

* Whether the employee was warned that the comments were offside. Here, Gillam was warned his behaviour could not be condoned, which contributed to the finding that his case should be dismissed.

* Whether the employee knew or ought to have known that the comments were unwelcome.

"Sidney Crosby needs to be in elite shape to perform at the level that he needs to perform at. I haven't talked to him, but I don't think he was feeling great. You can't miss that much time in a season, even Sidney Crosby."

Gary Roberts on Tuesday. The former NHLer, who played two seasons with Sidney Crosby in Pittsburgh, said the superstar probably suffered during the Penguins' first-round loss to the Philadelphia Flyers after coming back from a concussion. Roberts retired at age 30 due to a serious neck injury. But he changed his lifestyle, started to train differently and returned to play a total of 21 seasons.

Game 2

Devils	Flyers

Adam Larsson watched Game 1 from the press box, dressed sharply in a suit and tie. From the rafters, he sat helpless as he watched his New Jersey Devils lose a tough road opener in this Eastern Conference semifinal series against the Flyers in overtime.

In Game 2, though, he received his chance to shed the suit, and don a uniform.

And the 19-year-old rookie took full advantage.

Larsson scored the first post-season goal of his career off a wristshot in the third, igniting a four-goal explosion in the period, as the Devils rallied to a 4-1 win over Philadelphia on Tuesday night.

"I know how the playoffs (are)," Larsson said. "I watched all the games from the stands. I know that everybody steps up a little bit. I knew in my mind, if wanted to stay in the lineup, I had to step it up."

Larsson and Clarkson scored consecutive goals in the third period to rally the Devils past the Flyers and make up for the absence of Ilya Kovalchuk. The Devils played without their regular-season leading scorer because of a lower body injury.

Travis Zajac added a late goal to make it 3-1, and Bryce Salvador scored a late empty-netter for the Devils.

Game 3 is Thursday in Newark, N.J.

Matt Read scored 2:53 into the game to give the Flyers hope they could jump to a commanding series lead. Instead, the offence went into a funk and goalie Ilya Bryzgalov couldn't protect the advantage.

Even without Kovalchuk, the Devils did what they wanted against Bryzgalov, taking close shots and dominating the play in the Flyers' zone.

They just couldn't score — until the third.

Bryzgalov, who signed a $51-million US, nine-year deal last summer, was especially stout in the second when he bailed out the Flyers offence with a 12-save period. The Flyers went more than 18 minutes in the period before taking a shot on Martin Brodeur.

Bryzgalov had a brutal first five games of the post-season and allowed 20 goals against Pittsburgh. But he shut down the Penguins in the Game 6 clincher — a 5-1 win — and allowed three goals in the Game 1 victory against the Devils.

He appeared to have turned the corner.

Then came the final period.

Kovalchuk's injury opened a roster spot for Larsson, a rookie defenceman, to be activated. Larsson was a first-round pick last year and had two goals and 18 points in his first NHL season, but had not played a playoff game yet.

"Down a goal, third period, and it was huge," DeBoer said of the rookie's goal. "I feel great for Larsson. He's been out a few games, and he responded."

Clarkson made it 2-1 minutes later when he scored off a rebound. The Devils won the faceoff and Zach Parise was stuffed with a pad save. Clarkson then crashed the net to knock in the puck and fly gut-first into the crossbar. He lay on top of the net briefly as his teammates mobbed him.

Bryzgalov slammed his stick in frustration after the goal.

Zajac's fifth goal of the post-season on a backhander made it 3-1 and gave the Devils the insurance goal they needed.

"I really felt we'd respond like this," DeBoer said. "I knew we'd be better than Game 1. Knew we'd bounce back. We've dealt with adversity and injuries all year. It's nothing new." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

"We were comfortable with how we played the first two periods. And it was just a matter of keeping it going in the third. And the goals came."

Ovechkin forced to adapt in playoffs

NHL. Capitals captain still providing offence with fewer opportunities

Alex Ovechkin's ice time keeps shrinking in the playoffs, plummeting to a career-low 13-1/2 minutes in Game 2 of the Washington Capitals' Eastern Conference semifinal against the New York Rangers.

Seems to be working so far.

With the series tied 1-1 and shifting to Washington for Game 3, a major topic of conversation is how little the two-time MVP Ovechkin is playing. Despite the reduced action, Washington's captain managed to net the winning goal on a power play in Game 2.

"We don't go down the sheet at the end of the game and say, 'How much did Ovi play?'" Capitals defenceman Karl Alzner said Tuesday. "You know he wants to play more, and he's frustrated by not playing 20 minutes. But he doesn't care — he wants to win that game."

Quoted

"Sometimes, if you're not (out) there, you feel like you're not in (the) game, but if you have 10-second shift or five-second shift, you just have to go there and do something. It's kind of hard."

Alex Ovechkin after Game 2 in New York.

No one on the Capitals has scored more goals this postseason than Ovechkin's three. And he leads the team with six points, too.

But coach Dale Hunter is hiding Ovechkin on the bench for long stretches, especially when the Capitals are trying to protect a lead.

In the regular season, Ovechkin topped Washington's forwards, averaging 19:48 of ice time and 16:08 at even-strength. In the playoffs, he ranks third, and his numbers are down to 19:08 and 15:23.

In Monday night's 3-2 win in New York, Ovechkin's 10:36 of even-strength time was eighth among Washington's 12 forwards — and was nearly six minutes less than Jay Beagle.

"We've got guys like Beagle, (Jason) Chimera and (Matt Hendricks) that are looked at when we're leading in a game to maintain that lead," forward Troy Brouwer said. "Alex knows that, and he has to accept that."

Whether Ovechkin's diminished role is due to an inability or unwillingness to play the safe, defensive hockey Hunter seeks or a result of something else, it's tough to argue with the results.

And now Hunter's Capitals are even with the top-seeded Rangers.

"He's coaching the situations. He's playing certain guys. If we're down a goal, (Ovechkin is) going to be our main guy. He's going every other shift. If we're up a goal, then Dale tends to lean on other guys. That's the way it is," forward Mike Knuble said. "For now it's working and we're going to run with it."

Pierce lifts Celtics to victory

Paul Pierce battled through another tough shooting night to score 36 points and the Boston Celtics wiped out Atlanta's 11-point lead in the second half even without Rajon Rondo, stunning the Hawks 87-80 on Tuesday in Game 2 of the Eastern Conference playoffs.

The series is tied 1-1. Boston point guard Rondo sat out a one-game suspension for bumping an official in the opener.

The Hawks appeared to be in control when they pushed out to a 65-54 lead late in the third quarter. But Boston sliced it to 66-61 by the end of the period, and Pierce led a dominating fourth. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NHL. Predators pair to sit out for selfish behaviour

The Nashville Predators already face a tough challenge returning home, down 0-2 to the Phoenix Coyotes in their Western Conference semifinal.

Now, they either have something to rally around with forwards Alexander Radulov and Andrei Kostitsyn suspended for Game 3 on Wednesday night or wind up with yet another excuse in this series.

The Predators announced the suspensions Tuesday morning, and general manager David Poile and coach Barry Trotz said the decision to punish the forwards for violating unspecified team rules was easy. The general manager is leaving the decision on whether the pair return for Game 4 on Friday night up to Trotz.

Poile refused to specify what Radulov and Kostitsyn did, saying any hint would give away what they did. He called their behaviour unfortunate and selfish.

"I hope there is some remorse for what they did," Poile said. "Time will tell with their behaviour and if they get the opportunity to get back into the lineup."

The timing couldn't be worse for the Predators. They haven't trailed 0-2 in a series since 2008 against Detroit.

Ford Fusion classes it up

PHOTOS BY WHEELBASE

Review. For 2013, there's a whole new bag of tricks, new looks and a plug-in hybrid model. Ford, you have our attention.

MALCOLM GUNN
Wheelbase Media

The next-generation Ford Fusion is more than a new mid-size sedan; it's really the marriage of high-fashion style with league-leading fuel economy. Oh, and some significant technological treats are also coming along for the ride.

The Fusion's latest powertrain array borders on overwhelming, seemingly geared for a world where gasoline prices threaten to reach stratospheric levels.

But if content is king, then the other half of this royal equation is the king's new apparel. The Fusion's January launch at the North American International Auto Show in Detroit, Mich., caused palpable buzz amongst the assembled media. The dramatic sweep of the roofline suggests kinship with the Audi A7, Volkswagen CC and CLS-class Mercedes-Benz, while the open-mouth grille veers 180-degrees from the current triple-bar fixture. Simply put, the Fusion will possibly be the classiest-looking mid-size sedan on the road when it goes on sale in the third quarter of 2012.

The Fusion's high fashion extends to the cabin where passengers are greeted with fancier trim, comfier seats and a freshly pressed control panel. Ford says that passenger space has increased by relocating the dashboard closer to the windshield.

With near-revolutionary improvements in looks and content, Ford appears determined to become the leading innovator within the mid-size sedan pack and at the same time improve its standing in that ultra-competitive segment.

The Fusion's control panel is very typical of the high-quality design coming from most automakers. You can't tell, but the dashboard is closer to the windshield than before, which creates more room.

Go ahead, drop the gate

For the most part, pickup tailgates don't have it easy. Rarely, it seems, are they ever gently lowered. Instead they're usually just dropped open, placing considerable stress on the hinges and support cables. That problem is eliminated with the EZ-Down kit from Stabilus. The product consists of a damper that attaches to one side of the bed and connects to the tailgate using the supplied hardware. EZDown has been designed for most domestic and import pickups dating back to the late 1990s. Kits are priced at $70, including a two-year warranty. Check out the installation video at ezdown.com, while the purchasing process can be handled directly at ezdownstore.com.

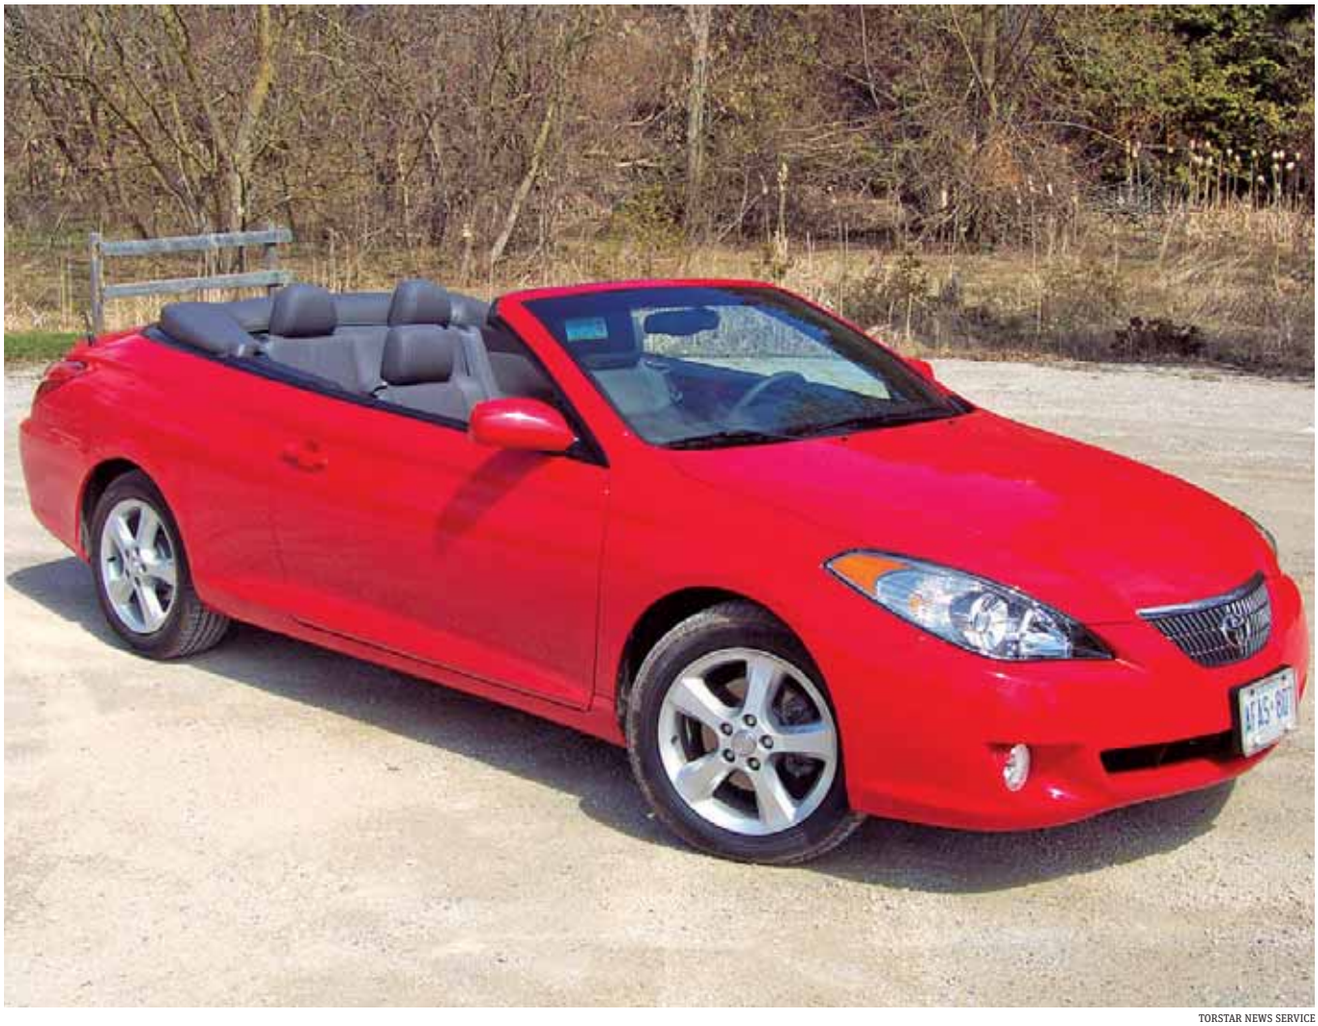
With an attempt at injecting some fun and excitement into the Toyota Camry lineup, the Toyota Camry Solara (Toyota Solara for short) turned the automaker's reliable and well-loved Camry into a two-door coupe or convertible. Intended for shoppers after a more personal motoring experience, the second-generation Solara debuted as a 2004 model, and has now transitioned into used-car territory.



TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Common issues

Checking out a Solara Convertible? Inspect the roof mechanism thoroughly. Rips, tears, abrasions and duct-tape patches are all bad signs. Inspect the area where the roof stores for signs of rust, mildew or moisture, which could indicate a leak.

Soak the car aggressively in a coin-operated spray-and-wash to inspect for leaks. Some owners have reported leaks through the convertible top, as well as a tendency for water collected on the roof to drip into the cabin when the doors are opened.

Lumpy or sporadic acceleration may be the result of a bad engine sensor, and any hard shifting from the transmission is likely a computer-related issue that requires reprogramming of the gearbox's electronic 'brain.'

Engine

Look for four or six-cylinder power with output between approximately 160 and 230 horsepower, respectively, and automatic transmissions all around. All models were front-wheel drive.

What owners like

Most Solara owners rave about relatively generous trunk space, sharp looks, good gas mileage and an easy-to-use convertible top.

A smooth ride, spoiling looks and a comfortable interior round out the package.

What owners dislike

Most owners say the Solara is more set up for touring than sportiness — and that handling is less than inspiring.

A few owners also report squeaks and rattles as the car ages.

Verdict

A well-maintained Solara should prove to be a sensible, relatively spacious and easy-to-live-with machine.

Note that the lighter and less complicated coupe model should offer up better handling and a quieter ride, if you're not dead set on a drop-top.

Tire treads advance with virtual velocity

Driving Force. The road that tires must travel before getting on your car runs through a computer

JIL MCINTOSH
Drive@metronews.ca

The tread on your tires may look random, but it's actually a very specialized design. The grooves and blocks can affect how the tire channels water, how it grips on ice and even how loud or quiet it is.

In the 1900s, tire designers drew patterns with pencil and paper, says Neal Sehm, manager of mold design for Bridgestone Americas in Akron, Ohio.

"That didn't change much until about the 1970s, with the advent of CAD (computer-aided design)," he says.

"Instead of drawing boards, you used a computer to draw what you used to do by hand. It did minimal computations. It just gave you a different tool to do your sketching."

History lesson

- Early tires had almost no tread and could be slippery. Firestone introduced the first angular tread in 1908, formed in letters that spelled "Non-Skid" on the tires.
- Computer models are now so accurate that many tests — including those such as tire durability and crash-testing — are done only to validate the data, and reveal nothing that researchers didn't already expect.

The flat design had to be transformed into 3D, and in the earlier days, this meant hand-carving the pattern into a plaster mold. The next development was computer-aided manufacturing. The design would be programmed into a machine that produced an exact 3D replica with a computer-guided cutting head.

Today, computers can render perfect virtual versions.

"It's actually created in 3D space in the computer," Sehm says. "Drawings are no longer required to design, manufacture or even validate something that you make. We're looking at 3D pictures on the computer, and all the characteristics that you build into that picture are the same characteristics that you want on a tire."

Still, while the computer screen is showing a perfect three-dimensional rendition of a tire, "a lot of people have problems visualizing in 3D space," Sehm says.

An actual rendition of the design is still created, but today, it's likely to be made on a 3D printer. These machines use print heads just as your computer printer does, but instead of ink, they deposit layers of material — plastics, polymer or ceramics — and slowly build up the finished product.

This gives designers the ability to examine the 3D design and determine if they've achieved their goals.

Once the design is good to go, it's off to the next stage of production.

"The big thing is time," Sehm says.

"The bottom line is that when we get done with this, we have a design that we take to market."

Tempering spring optimism

Autopilot

AUTO PILOT
Mike Goetz
drive@metronews.ca

Spring is not kind to everyone. Just ask these Toronto Maple Leaf fans. CHRIS YOUNG/THE CANADIAN PRESS

Some wise person once said, "No winter lasts forever; no spring skips its turn."

The sentiment assumes spring rules and winter drools.

Not saying the assumption is wrong, just that it could be more nuanced. There are dark sides to everything, even to some of the wonderful things wrought by spring.

Pollen, for instance, eventually brings a glorious greening to trees and their ilk, but not before it sneaks en masse into various entry points in my head, and does an Occupy Wall Street in my sinus cavities.

There is also a dark side to the optimism generally associated with spring renewal. While it's possible for everyone to be optimistic, it's not possible for everyone to be on the winning side of whatever they are optimistic about. Just ask Canadian hockey fans. The puck hit the fan so to speak, at every Canadian NHL franchise this spring. And just to mangle that metaphor a bit more, that puck not only got chewed up in the fan, it ultimately killed the fan too, but not before the dying fan spit the puck back and right into the new flat screen TV, which also died an untimely death. Basically, spring equals death.

I'm only in this mood because one my favourite spring car rituals didn't turn out too well this past weekend.

I always look forward to firing up my old Jaguar every spring, after its long winter slumber. It's always great to once again breathe in its intoxicating mixture of gas, old leather, and oily metal, reacquaint myself with its lovely sheet metal, and hear the engine cough and spurt before smoothing out to a satisfying low and even rumble.

This year there was a large puddle of brake fluid under the Jaguar. Usually there is some, but this was over the top. No brakes.

Oh well, I'll start the engine at least. It fired right up. I tilted the "bonnet" forward to examine the engine while it warmed up. As soon as I did that I could smell raw gas, and then could see gas pouring out of the front carburettor. A stuck float probably. The usual remedy, hitting the bottom of the float bowl gently but firmly with a rubber hammer, didn't work. So then I tried hitting my head with the rubber hammer. That didn't work either.

I shut the engine off.

Instead of that first great drive of the season, I had one big mess to clean up, and two mechanical problems to sort out. And I just spent the first part of the day doing income tax returns.

A lot or renewal happens in the spring, but old cars just get older.

I cleaned up the mess the best I could, put the cover back on the car, and went back in the house. Got a beer and watched the end of the Blue Jays game, which just happens to be another spring ritual of mine from time to time, and a much more dependable one too.
